Suburb Snapshot

Braddon is a Canberran suburb located next to Civic. Gazetted in 1928, the suburb was initially established as a division and was the location of Canberra's first light industrial district. It was named after Sir Edward Nicholas Coventry Braddon, an Australian politician who was one of the authors of the Australian constitution.

Today, Braddon boasts a vibrant community that has evolved from a sleepy, semi-urban precinct where industrial companies and offices are headquartered to a coveted lifestyle district that knows no rest. Those in the know are aware that Braddon is top of mind when it comes to its gastronomic surprises and that Braddon residents themselves are spoilt for choice. From ethnic dishes to home-cooked fare, Braddon, Canberra restaurants surely have something for everyone.
