

Mossy Point

Views on Candlagan

PID-STRA-28767

With absolute water frontage, the house is on Mossy Pt headland overlooking the surf and sand of one of NSW's finest beaches. Built in 1978 by a Danish architect and his Aussie mate, it is the country's first solar passive house. Its design has an indoor/outdoor ambiance to capture the beauty of the natural environment. In the summer months the roof is sealed against the heat, but the house has a thermal chimney through its centre to draw in the cooling sea breezes. In winter, the glass walls and windows flood the place with light and warmth. The house won a Home Beautiful of the Year award and has since featured in Australian architecture textbooks, as an example of how to create dwellings that integrate into the world around us, using the sun and wind.
